The reason I decided to become a tax professional is, as a child growing up, my parents had a small business, and if nothing else, they seemed to complain a lot about taxes, and I always wanted to learn and figure out how to help them pay less in taxes. So it was just a natural progression.

What gets me excited about the work I do is that every day is constantly changing. The tax laws are changing on an annual basis, if not more frequently than that. And so, I'm always learning and always trying to figure out the answers to new problems.

I impact my clients' businesses by helping them to manage their largest cost of operations, and that would be the income taxes. If you figure the income tax rate between federal and state is between 30% and 40%. If I can do anything to reduce those costs, it helps the client's bottom line.
