I became a CPA because, it was really a lot of small decisions that came together over time, but initially, I got inspired by my roommate's dad. He showed me and taught me a lot about the profession, what it meant to be a CPA, and kind of the opportunities that it can present. And there's so many directions you can go with your career with that, so I chose that path.

When I got into public accounting, I really started listening to those around me in this field, mentors, partners at the firm, managers at the firm, and really got inspired by them, their lives, their lifestyles, and the way they just put others first, and so is what I wanted to do for my career, and it's the path I followed, and I've really been happy ever since, and never looked back.

Think my clients would describe me as practical. Practical really is a vague term that can mean a lot of things, but in reality, what I think it means is honesty, honestly, and useful advice. And so where with that, for example, I believe you can ask a question and get a yes or no answer, but to dive into it a little bit more and say maybe you should be asking this question instead and telling clients that they may be looking in a different direction, rather than chasing a yes or no answer to a specific problem.

My greatest accomplishment in my career is probably a CPA license. It's probably the biggest and most important thing and factor in my career. But I've also pursued other credentials, a Masters in Legal Studies, a CCIFP, which is Certified Construction Industry Financial Professional. Those are all great things. I think also, having a partner group vote for you to be a partner of theirs is a big stamp on your career accomplishment.

But all that really pales into comparison of what I've what I've accomplished in my personal life. Having four kids with my wife is another huge accomplishment, and it's a, hopefully we can raise those, those kids and to be, you know, very successful adults. But in reality, if I put one, you know, crystal ball on top of everything, accomplishment is really a marrying my wife, she, she definitely, I out kicked my coverage on. I definitely accomplished a lot. I didn't even know it in that moment by just being able to share the rest of my life with her.
